

CHAMBERLAIN TO STAY IN OFFICE; TO FORM NEW CABINET

Conservative Committee of 1922 Advises Prime Minister To Retain Premiership

SAID TO BE WILLING TO

David Lloyd George and Labor Party Both Unwilling To Accept Office

By Charles A. Smith
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

LONDON, May 9—Undismayed by his narrow escape on a Laborite motion of "non-confidence," Prime Minister Chamberlain today decided to remain in office, if possible, at the head of a reconstructed British war cabinet.

He may submit a "technical resignation," it was learned, but this will be predicted by his continuance as Prime Minister.

The action he anticipates will be to enable reconstruction of his cabinet in such manner as to meet the opposition to his war policies which manifested itself last night when the House of Commons voted confidence in his ministry by the comparatively slim margin of 81 ballots.

The powerful so-called Conservative Committee of 1922, foundation stone of Chamberlain's party, was understood to have advised him to retain the Premiership, but to reconstruct his cabinet in its entirety.

The committee's decision was taken as the result of a recent assurance from Chamberlain that he was willing to make cabinet changes.

Early this afternoon, the situation stood as follows:

Chamberlain firmly intends to remain in office if he can.

Members of the Laborite opposition have accepted the ten day Whitsuntide adjournment believing that this will offer them sufficient opportunity to behind the scenes consultation.

Neither the Labor Party nor David Lloyd George are willing to accept office in the cabinet while Chamberlain remains at the helm.

LONDON, May 9—(INS)—Buffeted by two days of invective and angry criticism of his war policies in both the House of Commons and House of Lords, Chamberlain planned to review the situation fully with his cabinet colleagues today, taking full stock of the national uproar caused by the Allied failure in Norway.

Thereafter the Prime Minister may confer with King George VI, acquainting him with developments and informing the monarch of his decision, if one has been reached.

The Prime Minister omitted his usual stroll in the park today and conferred with Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax before going to the House of Commons. En route he was cheered by 100 spectators gathered in front of his Downing Street residence.

In the House, Clement Davies, Liberal, tabled a motion for the House to resume meeting May 14 instead of May 21, but it was considered unlikely that the motion would succeed since the Speaker will be empowered to recall the House at any time in the event of an emergency during the Whitsuntide recess.

In addition, Laborite members are anxious to get away for their annual conference at Bournemouth from May 13 to 16.

Several courses are open to Chamberlain, and decision as to which will be followed is Chamberlain's alone. This is true because his cabinet is a particularly personal one. Meanwhile he has given absolutely no indication, even to his closest friends, of what his decision will be.

The apparent alternatives facing him are:

1—He may agree to form a new government, with sweeping changes of personnel. He will, however, be unable to form a wider national government, as Laborites steadfastly refuse to enter the cabinet under Chamberlain's leadership.

2—The Prime Minister may go to the King, formally resign and refuse to form a new administration.

3—Chamberlain may recommend that someone else become Prime Minister. In this event Foreign Secretary

Bristol Photographer Designs New Light

The new fluorescent light unit designed by W. B. Nichols, Bristol, and now being used by the Nichols Studio, has attracted widespread attention by out-of-town photographers.

"This photographic light," Mr. Nichols says, "will revolutionize portrait lighting, and right now, modern studios are discarding their present lighting systems for this wonderful light." It is said to be the nearest thing that scientists have developed, to cold light.

The Royal Lighting Co., who built the unit is so optimistic, they expect to build and sell 1000 of them to photographers who constantly keep on the alert for better equipment.

Mr. Nichols says he will gladly show this light to those interested. At present, they are not for sale.

At Shad Dinner of Mothers' Ass'n; School Directors and Others Are Guests

TO FETE GIRLS' TEAMS

The final meeting of the Mothers' Association for the season was held in Bristol high school building last evening, the annual shad dinner being served to members and their guests, school directors, superintendent of schools, Warren P. Snyder, and high school principal, David Hertzler.

Doxology was sung as the blessing; Mrs. David Neill, a past president, acted as toast mistress; and group singing was led by Mrs. Earl McEuen, vice-president.

The dining tables were decorated with purple candles and bouquets of yellow daisies. Favors were tulip-shaped cups of purple and yellow, filled with mints. The following menu was served by a committee headed by Mrs. Herbert Hanson: Baked shad, parsley potatoes, fresh string beans, lettuce and carrot salad, scallions, radishes, rolls, butter, cream-puff shells filled with strawberries and whipped cream, coffee.

The meeting was held in the auditorium, Mrs. William Berchers presiding. Reports by the secretary, Mrs. Arthur Zug, an treasurer, Miss Hilma Pope, were accepted. Plans were made for the annual supper to be tendered the girls' basketball, track and baseball teams, on June 19th. Beautiful plants were presented to Mrs. Robert Patterson, the oldest mother, and to Mrs. James Wright, the youngest mother, present.

Mrs. Jacob Townsend, chairman of the program committee, arranged the following numbers: Selections, high school orchestra and chorus, under direction of Charles Quigley; piano accordion selections, Janice McEuen; vocal solo, Miss Margaret Phipps, accompanied by Miss Jean Roberts; "Tribute To Mothers," Mrs. Mildred Morse; "True and False" program, participants being the Misses Ruth

Takes Charge of Office

Media, May 9—Assuming complete charge of the Delaware County Prosecutor's office, acting District Attorney Henry E. Sweney today launched his reign by immediately dismissing Chief of County Detectives Raphael M. Kaplan.

At the same time it was announced that George Proctor, former chief farmer at Broad Meadows Prison Farm, had resigned as a county detective at Sweney's request. Kaplan could have been ousted yesterday, but Sweney was unable to act because District Attorney William B. McClenahan, Jr., was still within the county.

Just Another One Among the Many

(By "The Stroller")
"Add this one to your list of 'pet peeves,'" urged a reader of The Courier the other day. Then he went on to suggest that the old dilapidated building at the foot of Wood street is one of the worse eye-sores in this community.

Hundreds of folks from out of town come into Bristol and park their cars on the borough's parking lot. One of the first things to stare them in the face is the old building just mentioned. It certainly gives a very unfavorable impression of Bristol.

Our list of "pet peeves" is not exhausted, but we are tiring of publishing them, because nothing has been done about eliminating them.

Owners of the ground on which others have been dumping their rubbish, apparently take the position that they did not put it there and therefore will not clean up the mess. They can hardly be blamed for this attitude. But think what a neater appearance Bristol would present if all of these dumps were eliminated.

Vacant ground could be posted and then if persons were caught throwing litter thereon they could be prosecuted.

House To Recess This Afternoon

Harrisburg, May 9—Opening the third day of the special session, the Republican-controlled House prepared to pass and forward to the Senate today, Governor James' entire program, including the deficit appropriations of $111,850,000 for relief.

The House will then recess this afternoon until next week, reconvening on Wednesday or Thursday, the Senate announced, and a motion to adjourn the Legislature, sine die.

During the seven hours of continuous session yesterday, the House gave second reading to all 17 Administrative measures, passing them in line for third reading, and passage today.

Norway Has Lost Four Divisions

Paris, May 9—Norway has already lost at least four of its six divisions, Norwegian Foreign Minister Koht declared today.

The remnants of the fifth and sixth divisions are concentrated in the Narvik area or are proceeding there, he said, while troops of the first four are dead, taken prisoner, dispersed, or interned in Sweden.

Military supplies of grain sufficient for a year have been put aside, away from German hands, Koht declared.

King Haakon and his government, determined to continue resistance, has already purchased huge quantities of supplies and munitions from England, he said.

RACE FOR MARRIAGE LICENSES CONTINUES

Clerks at Doylestown Work Overtime to Care for The Applications

TO BEAT THE DEAD-LINE

DOYLESTOWN, May 9—The race for marriage licenses in Bucks county continues daily. The clerks in the office of the Bucks County Bureau located in the office of the Clerk of Orphans' Court are simply swamped. They are working overtime in order to get the applications out on time, and so far no one has been disappointed.

All the rush is to beat the deadline on May 13 after which it will be necessary to have a properly endorsed medical certificate from an approved or State laboratory, in order to get a license to be married in Pennsylvania.

Most of the last-week rush is coming from Philadelphia and Trenton. Philadelphia has had to put on many extra clerks and in some instances applicants have to wait in line for hours.

Up until noon today exactly 100 marriage license applications had been received and recorded at the Bucks county bureau since May 1. That means 100 licenses in five days. Forty-five applications were received on Monday and during the first half-day this morning a total of 18 had been received.

DOYLESTOWN TEACHERS RESIGN FROM DUTIES

Board Regrets Loss; Miss Johnson To Retire After Teaching There 18 Years

DISCUSS THE TAX RATE

DOYLESTOWN, May 9—Two members of Doylestown public school faculty, who have been teaching here for a number of years, have tendered their resignations.

Miss Gertrude S. Johnson, sixth grade teacher, is to retire after serving as an instructress in the local schools for the past 18 years. The board at a recent meeting expressed appreciation of Miss Johnson's fine service.

The other member of the faculty resigning is Mrs. Margaret Lehman Beck, who has been head of the English department of the high school for 10 years. The board regretfully accepted this resignation, also.

The board adopted the 1940-41 school budget of $113,300; and set the tax rate at 12 mills. Salary increases totaling $1450 were granted.

Following a discussion during which supervising principal Halderman advocated spending $3500 in order to improve the new school tract by building a track, girls' hockey field, football field and three tennis courts which could be carried financially by raising the tax rate one mill, the board deferred action upon raising the tax rate until more positive assurance can be had about the exact cost of getting the new school tract ready for its athletic layout.

Mr. Halderman, who pointed out that after this year the school district's classification will change because of the increase in population, said it would be advisable to raise the tax rate one mill at a time instead of two mills when the change is made from the fourth class to a third class district. He insisted that raising the tax rate one mill from 12 to 13 would carry nicely the burden of improving the new tract for a modern athletic field layout.

The Hoover Position

Washington, May 8.

THE position of Mr. Herbert Hoover in the Republican picture is interesting and practically unique. It is the more interesting because no one knows completely what it is or what it will be—including Mr. Hoover.

The one sure thing is that he has no personal axe to grind. He is not, for example, seeking the nomination for himself.

THAT statement will arouse decision among certain politicians and propagandists in both parties. The Hoover haters generally will reject it with scorn. The real reason they will not believe it is because it is the truth. There is a well-known type of politician and journalist who instinctively revolts against the truth, invariably

TUBERCULOSIS IS CURABLE, BRISTOL STUDENTS INFORMED

Dr. J. Fred Wagner Tells That Symptoms Should Not Be Ignored

CUE TO TREATMENT

Infinitely Small Bacillus So Deadly It Can Destroy A Life in A Few Months

That tuberculosis can be prevented, and that tuberculosis is curable, were two of the main points stressed by Dr. J. Fred Wagner, when he addressed the student body of Bristol high school, totalling over 600 pupils, yesterday afternoon.

Appearing before the pupils, to present this timely health address, Dr. Wagner spoke under auspices of the Division of Health Education, Pennsylvania Department of Health, the plans for the talk being arranged by Mrs. Minerva Epstein, representing that department. He was introduced to the assembly by the president of the student body, Jack Healey.

A wealth of information and advice was crowded into the 15-minute period taken by the prominent Bristol physician, who told the students that "We still have young folks in our community, and throughout this broad land, who have developed tuberculosis. And this disease is very much more common in young folks than in older folks." He added that, whereas in years gone by, the physician was the only one in the community who was supposed to know anything about the disease, now people of all ages know of it, something of its causes, and cure, and can better cope with it.

The physician informed that tuberculosis is a germ disease, the germ belonging to the plant kingdom. "And when dealing with the tubercle bacillus, you are dealing with an object so infinitely small that you can't define it. But it is so deadly that it can destroy a life in a few months."

Dr. Wagner informed that tuberculosis is an old disease, it being recognized for several centuries, but the germ only being isolated during the 19th century.

The relation of bovine tuberculosis to human tuberculosis was considered at length, the speaker telling that there are many more forms of the disease in the human body than in cattle.

Precautions to guard against the disease, were suggested, the young people being told that, although contagious, tuberculosis comes more frequently through the medium of food and drink. He advanced as a reason why the disease is more prevalent among young people, that milk from infected cattle might be the cause. "The germ, in passing into the mouth, might come in contact with a scratch on the mucous membrane, or with diseased tonsils. The germ then burrows its way to the stomach, the area beneath the mucous membrane being very spongy, and after referred to as 'swamp land.' It is just the type of medium in which the germ thrives." Dr. Wagner told of how the germ is absorbed by the lymph glands, and the disease does not progress, if the individual's body is strong enough to fight it. If the physique is weakened, the germ passes on through the lymph channels, eventually reaching vital points, possibly the lungs, the tissue of which is ideal for the thriving of the disease.

He told how, if resistance is sufficient, a "healed-in" condition results. X-rays revealing the arrested spots on the lungs.

The symptoms of the disease were mentioned, so that the young folks might easily recognize it, and carry the health message home to their families. They were informed that "if you have had a cold most of the Winter, have lost weight, have no appetite, a rapid pulse, it is quite certain that you might have the disease, and an immediate examination should be made by a physician. The early symptoms should not be ignored." The cue to the treatment was mentioned as plenty of sunlight and fresh air.

The high school orchestra, under direction of Charles Quigley, provided selections; and motion pictures followed the address.

LEARNING WESTERN WAYS

The Japanese long ago proved their adaptability to Western ideas and Western technique in industrial and commercial fields. Now they seem to be displaying a similar adaptability to some notions coming out of European totalitarian states.

An illustration may be found in a pamphlet issued to the Japanese army in Manchuria by Lieut. Gen. Seishiro Itagaki, commander-in-chief, on the occasion of the emperor's thirty-ninth birthday. In this pamphlet the Japanese general explains to his soldiers why they are in China. They are there, it seems, to "emancipate" the Chinese from the British, Americans, French and Russians who are instigating Chinese resistance to the visiting emancipators.

Describing the "China incident" as a "holy war," General Itagaki says that one Japanese objective is to destroy illusions about the "Chung-king regime" (or Chinese government) "which is acting on the instigation of Britain, the United States, France and the Soviet—and its armed bandits. An attack on good Chinese people is not our objective. The other objective is to counteract Europe's and America's hostile attitude toward Japan. Those countries fear that China's independence and emancipation will be achieved through Japan. The Soviet plots to have Japan and China mutually exhausted. Both attitudes are morally wrong and based on selfish interest."

General Itagaki, it will be observed, covers more ground in his allotment of blame than does his obvious model, the propaganda department of the German government. Nazi "emancipation" of Poland and Denmark and the still unfinished "emancipation" of Norway were designed to free the good people of Poland, Denmark and Norway from the wicked British. General Itagaki blames not only the wicked British, but the wicked Americans, French and Russians as well.

PILL DIET NEXT?

For a long time, fiction writers have toyed with the idea that invention may simplify human existence by concentrating nutrition. Thus, instead of spending hours in preparation and consumption of food, one might at intervals swallow a pill of high-voltage energy with a teaspoonful of cell builder, and give the matter no further thought.

Such achievements are not in sight, but perhaps an approach has been made in the first project completed at Michigan State College through research financed by the half million dollar Rackham Foundation gift. A process extracting carotene from green plants has been perfected and patented.

Nutrition experts for some time have been urging people to eat certain vegetables that yield vitamin A. A ready source of this is three yellow pigments that are in carrot root and in a number of other plants. Eggs, milk, liver oil and some other foods furnish the vitamin A but the source is in the vegetables consumed by animals. The basic element is carotene.

The new discovery takes carotene out of alfalfa by a simple, practical process. And progress toward the idealized pill diet is indicated by the announcement that "a ton of alfalfa meal, containing a half pound of carotene, would be source of sufficient vitamin A for one hundred persons for a year."

The Great Game of Politics

Influence in his party and in the country. Undoubtedly he has a larger personal following than any other Republican. But his personal following and his political following are two very different things. Republican politicians, disagreeing on nearly everything else, are united about Mr. Hoover. They eulogize him personally. They agree that he is the best-qualified man for the Presidency. However, they are completely unanimous in asserting that he cannot be nominated, or, if nominated, could not possibly be elected. On that they are united as on nothing else.

NOW, no one knows this better than Mr. Hoover and no one has acquiesced in it more completely. Those who know him best assert that he is not only cheerful and humorous about it but actually greatly relieved. At 66, he has no desire to take on again the burdens of the Presidency. What he is vitally concerned about is in sweeping the New Deal out. Convinced that the country, tough as it is, cannot stand another four years of New Dealism, he probably will support any one of the possible Republican aspirants.

HIS friends say that what he is anxious about is that his party should nominate not only a man who can be elected but who can handle the job after election. His argument is that the situation as it exists late in June may be very different from the situation now and that it is the part of wisdom not to make commitments now that easily may be bad later. To this end he has thrown his weight on the side of uninstructed delegates and advised going slow before making a final convention choice.

ACTING on this idea, he has declined to indicate a preference for any of the avowed aspirants. Nor is he likely to do so before the convention meets. He will have a large voice in the convention affairs and there will be a number of delegates who will take his advice on platform and candidates. Moreover, the nominee, whoever he may be, will need Mr. Hoover's aid in the campaign very much indeed. Practically everybody concedes these things, but because he will not now commit himself to any individual, the inflated partisans are convinced that he is scheming to get the nomination for himself. It isn't, of course, true, but there is no way to make them believe it. And it isn't important whether they do or not.

"Spoiled Girl" by LUCILLE MARSH JOHNSON

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

Because of the coming of the new baby Dorothy stayed home more and more. She enjoyed having Gabrielle with her, and Gabrielle took a morose pleasure in watching Dorothy and Tony and their baby together.

She often helped too with young Tony's bath, his bottle, and his daily sunning. When he grew to know her, Gabrielle was enchanted. She had never been around babies much; this was the first time she had ever realized their attraction.

"Why, Dottie!" she exclaimed, one of the warmer mornings in early November, "he knows me! He knows his Aunt Gaby, don't you, darling?"

The baby cooed ecstatically, waving his mittened hands around and around. Dorothy smiled from the doorway, and said:

"Well, 'Aunt' Gaby, of course he knows you! My child is extra intelligent you know, on account of his parents, I suppose."

"In spite of them you mean," grinned Gabrielle, bringing the baby inside.

She laid him on the divan before the fire and began taking off his knitted suit with efficient hands, talking a jargon all her own to young Tony. He seemed delighted with her observations and helped in their conversation with many little gurgling sounds.

"You've certainly learned how to handle a baby, Gaby," Dorothy said, sitting down in a nearby chair. "When your own arrive you won't be at all awkward with them."

Gabrielle looked up, her cheeks flushed from the fire, her eyes looking like pure gold in the partly artificial light. Her lips parted in a whimsical little smile.

"I never wanted a baby before this fall, Dottie," she confessed. "But now I want one more than most anything I can think of—except Peter."

"You've certainly been a different person lately," observed Dorothy, holding out her arms for her son.

"His bottles should be ready, Gaby," she went on. "Will you see please?"

Gabrielle went into the modern red and white tiled kitchen where Eliza was measuring young Tony's daily quota of milk into sterilized bottles. The room was spotless, and yellow sunshine gleamed brightly through the small panes of the windows, where red and white checked gingham hung.

When the baby was busy with his meal, Gabrielle asked:

"Dot, do you suppose if I wrote and told Peter that I was coming—just announced it as a fact—do you suppose he'd be glad? Do you think he'd think me without any pride at all?"

"I've written and hinted, Dot, several times now. Peter just answers with sentences concerning the weather, his work, and ends by hoping my father and mother are well."

"It was just too bad you couldn't go when he asked you to," mused Dorothy, shifting the baby to a more comfortable position on her arm.

"And yet, you've changed so much and for the better since then."

"You keep saying that, and Bob—he said about the same thing. I do feel different about many things but I can't see how it would show so plainly to everyone!"

Dorothy laughed, setting the baby's bottle on a table close by. She picked him up and put him over her shoulder, patting his back gently.

"There's a difference, and it's plainly noticeable, my sweet!" assured Dorothy.

"I'm glad," said Gabrielle, putting her hand on Dorothy's.

"Think I'd better be getting back, Dorothy. I told Violet I'd bake a cake and go for the fresh vegetables. She's bothered with her rheumatism again, poor thing."

Dorothy smiled and started to get up.

"Don't bother to come to the door with me; and have Tony call me if you need me for anything."

She walked briskly toward home, her thoughts busy formulating what she might say to Peter when she wrote to him. She couldn't understand why he wouldn't ask her to come when she'd given him so many openings. She'd said in her last letter to him:

"Daddy's much improved and works about as usual. He doesn't seem quite his old self—though I can't just figure out why, Peter; he eats, sleeps, and works, yet he appears worried, or ill, I just don't know which."

"I think I might be able to get away in November sometime though, and attend one of your broadcasts. I've always been so sorry I had to miss the premiere, Peter..."

But in Peter's answer there had been no reference to her coming.

She arrived home and went directly upstairs to change her clothes. There didn't seem to be anyone about but she really hadn't expected that there would be. It was nearing noon and she knew her mother had planned to go to town to shop that morning. She hadn't said whether she would lunch at home, or not.

Odd came sleepily out of his basket, yawned, and stretched, then yawned again. He seemed to come awake all of a sudden and began to greet her. He pranced around, jumped straight up in the air, and made small noises of affection.

Gabrielle picked him up, rubbed her cheek against his velvet smooth ears, then set him down with finality.

"I've work to do, sir, even if you haven't! My, but you're lazy, Odd!"

She found a fresh wash frock in the clothes room and donned it while Odd sat watching her from eyes as bright and wise appearing as though he knew everything she was saying to him.

Turning and shifting toward the hall occasionally, bringing his ears forward then backward, Odd moved around nervously. Gabrielle took up a comb and stood smoothing her blonde hair, and watching Odd with amusement. He whined. But then Odd was always thumping he heard something...

"You really believe in ghosts, don't you, boy?" she asked, as she brushed her pink linen dress for any stray hairs which might have fallen.

Odd pricked up his ears again but not at her words. He trotted to the door, sniffing inquisitively. Then Gabrielle heard voices too. They were muffled but she knew they came from the room across the hall, from her parents' sleeping room.

"That's funny," she thought, aloud. "Wonder if Daddy's sick."

She opened the door and went into the hall; there she hesitated. All at once she heard her father say distinctly:

"I tell you, Helen, it's imperative that I find some cash at once! The Snowball's filling with salt water, and the whole string of tools are lost and I don't get them out right away! The Snow Queen has hit sand—but what's the use—I can't even meet my payroll this week..."

"But Sam dear, there's Gabrielle's money—why don't you borrow from her?"

"No! I've always managed to get along without borrowing from my families. I'll go down to the bank in the morning—bust," he sighed, and to Gabrielle it sounded like her father was crying. "It's no good doing that. I've gotten every last cent they'd let me have now."

Gabrielle listened. She detected the weariness in her father's tone, and she swallowed convulsively. This then was what had been troubling her father! Helen was speaking, and Gabrielle listened without shame:

"But, Sam, why didn't you tell me? I could have cut down in lots of ways. I thought everything was going fine at the field, you really should have told me, Sam."

"What you could have saved wouldn't have been a drop in the bucket, Helen. I need thousands, I tell you. I'm in debt head over heels. God! After all my work and plans. But the Snow Queen will pay me out if only I can finance the rest," he groaned.

Resolutely Gabrielle knocked on the door:

"May I come in, parents?" she asked in a steady voice.

She kept her face as calm appearing as she could when her mother opened the door. She saw immediately that Helen had been crying; and she saw her father sitting slumped over in an overstuffed chair near the front windows. Her heart ached for them both.

"I couldn't help overhearing, Daddy," she said softly, going over to him. She took a seat on the arm of his chair and he put an arm around her but otherwise gave no other awareness of her being there.

"I can't say I'm sorry either," Gabrielle went on, smiling into her mother's tired looking blue eyes. "You see, you've never told me anything about your finances, Daddy—you've always been kind and good, giving me my every wish..."

She waited a moment but neither of them seemed likely to say anything, so she went on:

"You've spoiled me by your own admission, and I love you for it—although I'd have been a much better daughter if you hadn't—but well, the fact remains that you did spoil me."

"You're not too badly spoiled, Gaby," her father said, holding her closer to him. "We're not complaining, are we, Helen?"

Her mother smiled and shook her head.

"Let's all have lunch if there is anything," suggested Sam, and Gabrielle saw him muster his forces together to present a bright countenance to her. "What say, Gaby?"

"After awhile," she said. "I'll fix something."

He started to rise.

"No, sit still, Daddy," she objected, when he was taking his arm from around her. "I want to tell you something—I want to give you all my money except enough for a new outfit and a ticket to New York!"

Sam jumped to his feet, declaring in no uncertain terms that he certainly wasn't going to take her money.

Gabrielle smiled a little. All men must be brothers under the skin, she thought, remembering Peter. They all wanted to take entire care of their womenfolk and themselves without outside help.

"You'd use it if I were Mother's, wouldn't you, Daddy?" she asked.

"Well, probably; but that money was left to you, Gabrielle, and I'm not touching a penny of it. That's final!"

"I'm deeding practically all of the money to Mother in the morning," she told him softly. "You see, Uncle Gabe was her brother and if she hadn't named me after him, he'd probably have left the money to her anyway. He had no one else."

"I'll not touch it!" stormed Sam, pacing the bedroom floor.

"Well, I'm deeding it all to Mother in the morning, and you may go ahead and go bust if you want to, Daddy. I can't help it if you're stubborn. And," she paused, then started striding up and down alongside of him in exact imitation, "that's final!"

"The Royal Family" To Open At New Hope On 15th of June

The enlarged Bucks County Playhouse at New Hope, will open its Summer season on Saturday evening, June 15th, with the Broadway comedy success, "The Royal Family," by Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman.

Stellar honors in the opening bill will be shared by Peggy Wood, the New York and London star, and Louis Calhern, popular leading man, who has recently returned from a long stay in Hollywood, and who will spend the entire Summer in the company at New Hope. Miss Wood will have a role, that of a celebrated stage star, which she played in London last Spring with great success. Also in the cast in important roles will be Hilda Stoddard, whose appearances at the Bucks County Playhouse last summer made her a great local favorite, and Natalie Schafer, talented comedienne.

The Ferber-Kaufman comedy will play at the Bucks County Playhouse for eight days through Saturday evening, June 22. Thereafter plays will have their premiere Monday evenings and run a single week.

"The Royal Family" ran on Broadway for two seasons and was selected by Burns Mantle as one of the ten best plays of the year. Dealing with the vagaries of a theatrical family, it was originally reported that the play dealt with the Barrymores, which was denied by the authors. Nevertheless, critics insisted that the main characters were based on John and his sister, Ethel Barrymore.

Custard Desserts Your Family Will Like

By Katharine Fisher

Director, Good Housekeeping Institute

Desserts may come, and desserts may go, but desserts made with soft custard—perhaps you know it better as boiled custard—will always rank high in popularity. Children especially seem to eat dinner with a special relish if news leaks out beforehand that there's to be a soft custard or one of its variations for dessert.

If you've had difficulties with your soft custards—and we'll admit they are often troublesome—try the following Institute recipes. They have been carefully worked out and thoroughly tested, and we are sure you will be able to make them well.

Soft Custard

(Tested by Good Housekeeping Institute)

Use Institute-approved measuring cups and spoons. Measure level.

- | | |
|--|--------------------------|
| 2 c. bottled milk or 1 c. evaporated milk and 1 c. water | 1/4 c. granulated sugar |
| 3 eggs or 6 egg yolks | 1/4 tsp. salt |
| | 1/2 tsp. vanilla extract |

KATHARINE FISHER
Director of
Good Housekeeping
Institute

Scald the milk in a double boiler. Beat the eggs slightly; then add the sugar and salt. Add the milk, a little at a time, stirring constantly. Return to the double boiler and cook over hot, but not boiling, water, until the mixture coats the spoon—we find this takes about 7 to 8 min.—stirring constantly. Remove at once from the hot water; cool and add the vanilla. Serves 6. To serve 2 or 3, make half this recipe.

Serve this soft custard, deliciously chilled, over sliced bananas, oranges, peaches, or a combination of these; over cooked prunes, raspberries, baked apples, prune or apple whip; over fruit gelatin; over sliced sponge cake topped with fresh fruit; or over chocolate whipped-cream layer cake, and your family will root you to fame.

Floating Island

Follow the recipe for Soft Custard given above, using 6 egg yolks. When cool, turn into a serving dish and serve topped with a meringue made as follows: Beat 3 egg whites until almost stiff. Add 6 tbsp. granulated sugar and continue to beat until stiff. Drop from the tip of a spoon in small mounds onto gently boiling water. Cover, cook 4 to 5 min. Carefully lift mounds off water one by one, draining off all water; arrange on top of custard. Garnish with flecks of jelly.

Coconut Soft Custard

Follow the recipe for Soft Custard given above, using 6 egg yolks. Pour into baking dish. Beat 3 egg whites until almost stiff. Add 6 tbsp. granulated sugar gradually while continuing to beat. Fold in 1/2 c. shredded coconut. Arrange over top of custard and bake in a slow oven of 300° F. for 20 min.

Trifle

(Tested by Good Housekeeping Institute)

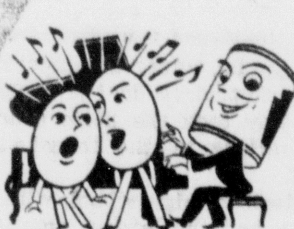

Use Institute-approved measuring cups and spoons. Measure level.

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|--|
| 2 c. stale cake, cut in small cubes | Once recipe Soft Custard (given above) |
| 1/4 c. jelly | |

Place one-third of the cake cubes in the bottom of a bowl; dot over with 2 tbsp. of the jelly. (Buy the jelly or use some of the previous store which you have made with the help of the bottled or powdered peaches now on the market.) Add another layer of one-third the cake cubes and dot over with the remaining jelly. Top with remaining cake cubes and pour chilled custard over all. Chill and serve in individual dishes, each topped with a bit of jelly. Serves 4 to 6.

NEW MENU NOTE

Here's a new suggestion and a pretty tasty one at that—a casserole dish of hard cooked eggs and delicious creamy cooked macaroni and cheese. Arrange thin layers of the macaroni, which is done up in tins all ready to serve, and slices of hard cooked eggs alternately in a buttered casserole. Let's say you use 4 eggs—keeping out 1 yolk for a garnish—and 1 can of the macaroni and cheese. You sprinkle each layer of egg with salt and pepper—but don't bother seasoning the macaroni because it's flavored perfectly as it is. The top layer should be macaroni and on that you sprinkle the egg yolk put through a little sieve and mixed with 4 tablespoons grated cheese. Bake for 20 minutes in an oven that's just so-so—not too hot and not too cold—about 375° F., if you want to be technical.

CREOLE STYLE BAKED BEANS

If this is one of those Fridays when you're cudgeling your brain for a meatless menu and everything you hit on seems uninspired, how about a baked bean supper? You know, a big pot of oven-baked beans makes a mighty easy meal to prepare. That statement would sound funny to your grandmother now, wouldn't it? It used to take her a couple of days to get a bubbling crock of beans ready for the family. But nowadays, skilled professional cooks do all this work for you. They wash and cut the beans and take them through and through, 'til every last bean is meaty and full of real roasted oven flavor. Then they drench these beans with the most piquant sauce that ever scented an old-fashioned kitchen and pack them in tins all ready to heat and serve. You can surely build a lot of mighty fine meals around these vegetarian oven-baked beans just as they come from the tin. Or, if you'd like to dress the pot up a bit with a few extra touches, try adding onion and green pepper slivers, and a cup of stewed tomatoes. Here's how:

BAKED BEANS, CREOLE STYLE

- Brown—
- 1/2 cup (1 medium) chopped onion
 - 1/2 cup (1 medium) finely chopped green pepper
- in—
- Butter.

Place in alternate layers in casserole with—

- 1 medium (18 oz.) can oven-baked beans, vegetarian style.

Sprinkle each layer of vegetable mixture lightly with—

- Salt.

Pour over top—

- 1 cup canned or stewed tomatoes.

Sprinkle with—

- 1 teaspoon sugar.

Bake in a hot oven (425° F.) about 30 minutes, or until the tomatoes thicken. (Serves 5.)

SCHOOL-DAY SPAGHETTI

When teacher finally says the words, "Class dismissed," you can be sure your youngsters won't loiter on the way home if they know there's a big platter of spaghetti waiting for them. Spicy spaghetti served in a nippy tomato and cheese sauce and studded with stout meat balls. It's a sure-fire filler-upper for school appetites, and takes just a little of your time to prepare when you use the ready-to-serve spaghetti that comes done up in tins. All you have to do is spoon the spaghetti into a saucepan or casserole and heat on top of the stove or in the oven. Then for extra heat and savor, make these quick trick meat balls, and you'll serve a luncheon dish that has what it takes to carry a lad or his sister through the afternoon.

COOKED SPAGHETTI WITH MEAT BALLS

Combine, then mix well—

- 1 lb. ground round steak
- 1/2 lb. ground pork
- 1/2 cup rice flakes
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1/2 teaspoon red pepper sauce
- 1/2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- 1/2 cup thin cream or top milk

Small portion of 1/2 cup (1 medium) chopped onion.

Shape into balls, then dip in—

Flour.

Cook to a rich brown with remaining onion in—

- 3 tablespoons pure olive oil.

Heat—

- 2 medium (17 oz.) cans cooked spaghetti in tomato sauce.

Pour spaghetti into heated serving casserole and arrange the meat balls over top. Sprinkle with grated cheese, if desired, or serve cheese separately. (Serves 6 to 8.)

Note: After meat balls are browned, they may be placed in bottom of baking dish, covered with spaghetti, sprinkled with cheese, then baked until done.

Chamberlain To Remain In Office; To Form New Cabinet

Lord Halifax is regarded as a likely choice to assume the post.

Chamberlain may try to remain in office and maintain his present cabinet. Should he attempt this, some circles predicted, junior government ministers may resign in a body in order to force Chamberlain's hand.

The entire country is waiting avidly to see what Chamberlain will do in this greatest crisis of his career.

His friends, pointing to his admittedly courageous character, said they could not visualize his giving up without further struggle. According to these circles, he may attempt to rally his forces and make a bid for continued leadership with a drastically re-constructed cabinet.

These same quarters also believed that a period of behind-the-scenes maneuvers may be expected before Chamberlain casts the die one way or another.

But opposition Laborites and Liberals jubilantly proclaimed that the House of Commons vote last night—281 to 200 in favor of Chamberlain in an embarrassingly thin vote of confidence—delivered the death blow to the prime minister's political career.

This opinion apparently was shared by most of the British press and a large percentage of members of Chamberlain's own Conservative party.

But at the same time it was recognized that Chamberlain is not a political quitter and will weigh carefully every factor and perhaps fight bitterly in belief his leadership is essential for national unity.

Discarding exaggerated claims made by both sides regarding the future, it seemed obvious that the present acrimonious situation will not be permitted to continue long and that a more harmonious arrangement will be worked out in the near, perhaps immediate, future.

The vote formed the slimmest majority Chamberlain ever has gained on an issue of confidence in his regime, although even smaller majorities have been recorded on domestic side issues. His previous confidence majorities have been in excess of 200 votes, as in the instance of the Czech crisis, when Chamberlain garnered a majority of 222.

In last night's contest, 130 government members of Parliament abstained from voting. Of these, 30 were ill, and some were serving abroad.

Forty-four Conservative members of Commons voted against Chamberlain, including American-born Lady Astor and all the service members. Lady Astor commented cryptically:

"This is the worst news Hitler has had."

The result of the vote raised a terrific clamor from the opposition benches. Shouts of "resign" echoed through the historic chamber and Laborites started singing "Rule Britannia."

Women of the Moose—the "College of Regents" and the "Academy of Friendship"—and is a member of the Mooseheart Alumni Association, organized in the interest of higher learning for the Mooseheart graduates.

For five years, Mrs. Hooper served her Chapter as senior regent. Evidence of her ability as a leader and her practical interest in the work of the organization may be gained from the fact that during these five years she served as executive officer, membership in the Baltimore Chapter increased from 85 to 500 members. She has served in practically every other important office in her Chapter, besides organizing a junior chapter with a membership of 275 children, training them in parliamentary law, developing them to be speakers and to give their services to the needs of others less fortunate than themselves. In September of 1937, Grand Dean Hooper was honored by the appointment of First Grand Dame of the Women of the Moose. In this capacity, Mrs. Hooper was instrumental in raising several thousands of dollars for the Mooseheart Hospital at Orange Park, Florida.

Some of the other organizations to which Mrs. Hooper belongs are the Mother's Club, the Cadet Club, Parent-Teacher Association, Housewives' Alliance, and the Catholic Fraternity. She has served on the Red Cross Board and is an active church worker.

The local chapter takes a special pride in the part the Women of the Moose play in the interest of Mooseheart as sponsors of the Mooseheart Laboratory for Child Research, which they maintain in addition, during the past 12 years, the Women of the Moose have contributed in actual cash $40,000 a year toward the maintenance of Mooseheart, over 17,000 books for the Mooseheart Libraries, in addition to the countless thousands of articles of clothing, linen, bedding and miscel-

Doylestown high school, with 10 candidates, had the largest number competing. Quakertown and New Hope both had seven contestants, and Sellersville and Perkasio had six representatives.

George School, the sole private school entered, had six pupils taking the examinations.

Pupils from Bensalem township school were included.

NEW QUICK WAY TO PREPARE Fried Chicken

Crisp golden crust outside, so tender and juicy inside

Bring on a platter of this Crisp-coated Fried Chicken and see the welcome it gets. And when your family taste it, they'll be still more delighted. For chicken fried this way is meltingly tender and wonderfully juicy, with a crisp, golden, delicate-tasting crust.

And there's no need for smoke or unpleasant odor when you deep-fry. New, pure vegetable spray stays sweet and fresh through repeated fryings, and can be used over and over—simply strain out food particles. Why not have this fried chicken tonight? It's a real treat and so much easier and quicker—so much juicier, too, than chicken fried by the usual recipe.

Crisp-coated Fried Chicken

3-pound frying chicken, cut in serving pieces
1 cup buttermilk
1 cup flour
3/4 teaspoon salt
3/8 teaspoon pepper

Dip pieces of chicken in buttermilk and drain thoroughly. Combine flour, salt and pepper in paper bag. Place one piece of chicken at a time in bag and shake well to coat evenly with flour. Fry chicken in deep hot spray (new vegetable shortening) at 375°F. until brown and crisp on both sides (about 7 minutes). Serves 4.

(All measurements in this recipe are level.)

RECIPES: Those Which Interest Women

Let's Make Mother's Day

A Special Holiday For Her

Here Are Some Ideas If Others In the Family Take Over The Kitchen For The Day

It's becoming an American custom, and it's a nice one, too, that Mother's Day truly is her special holiday. That means that she won't have anything to do in the kitchen all day. She's earned this holiday for, after all, preparing 1,695 meals a year is no easy job.

You might go out to dinner, of course, but even better, why don't you, the daughter, the son, or maybe Dad, take over the reins and really give her a treat.

The success of your meal, of course, depends on your choice of meat. Inez S. Willson, home economist, has an ace card up her sleeve to help you out on that score. Why not take advantage of the table-ready hams featured at your market?

Hams Excellent in Flavor

These hams are done to a perfection that would please the most critical connoisseur. No need for you to worry about the meal, for the meat will be excellent in flavor, it's all ready for the table and there's scarcely anything for you to do but step back and take the bows for your choice.

You can plan a very interesting dinner, and different, by serving the ham cold, just as it comes from the market.

In keeping with the season and with a taste for the appropriate, serve tender green asparagus tips with the ham, mashed sweet potatoes to which you have added a small amount of pineapple juice for a flavor thrill.

A crisp vegetable salad would be good, and if it isn't asking too much from one who is merely an invader of the kitchen, piping hot biscuits would make the meal perfect. Cater to Mother's special taste for dessert, and she'll be more than pleased with her day's vacation.

Ready-to-Eat Picnics

If a whole ham will be too large for your use, you will perhaps be interested in one of the ready-to-eat picnics which may be served in the same way. These modern meats can, of course, be heated and glazed, but they are so good you may prefer to leave them as they are. You can imagine their possibilities for buffet suppers.

Accent On Ham -- With Tart Fruits

The piquancy of tart fruits accents the savory tang of ham. Particularly in the springtime do we like the way fruit perks up our menu.

Ham for broiling, says Inez S. Willson, home economist, should be three-quarters to one inch thick to give best results in juiciness and flavor. Even if that means having some left over, you'll be repaid, for ham can be used attractively in so many different ways.

Broiled Ham with Apricot Glaze

Ham slice—1 inch thick
No. 2 can apricots
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon allspice
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Drain apricots. Place meat on broiler rack allowing three inches between the top of the meat and source of heat. If possible, if the size of the broiler doesn't allow this depth of space, lower the temperature of the broiler accordingly. Sprinkle with spices and cook until brown, basting with apricot juice occasionally. When brown, turn. Sprinkle other side with remaining spices and continue cooking, basting occasionally with apricot juice. When second side is done place apricot halves on top and heat for long enough to brown fruit slightly.

Ham with Pineapple

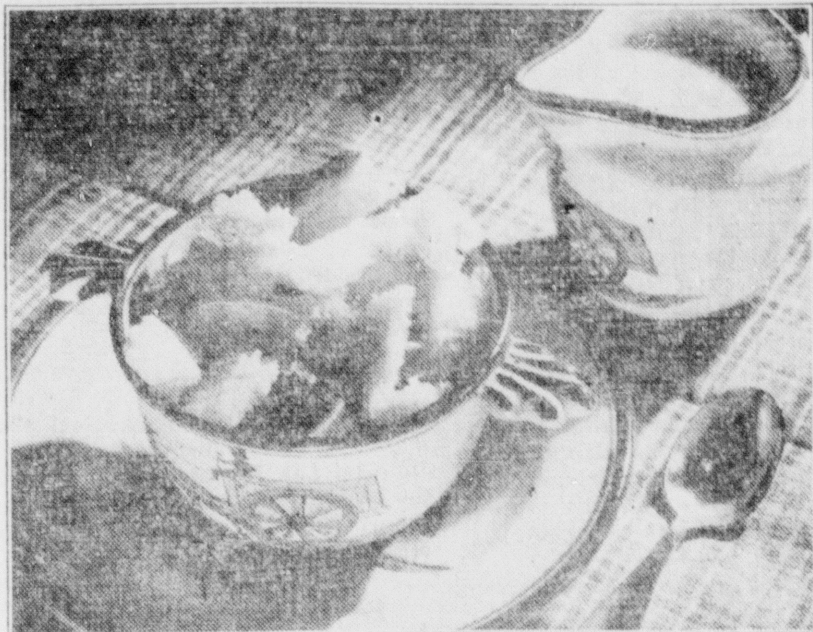

Ham with pineapple is a favorite. Try mixing one-half cup brown sugar with 1 cup shredded pineapple. Mix this and spread over ham after one side has been broiled. Finish broiling then serve with pineapple rings which have been simmered in sweetened pineapple juice until transparent. Serve with a maraschino cherry on each ring.

Cranberry Ham Slice

Broil ham slice at a low temperature in method described. About ten minutes before it is finished spread with one-half cup cranberry jelly. Decorate it with whole cloves and return to the oven to glaze, about ten minutes longer.

Health Twins — Bread and Milk

By BETTY BARCLAY

That good old-fashioned supper dish, a bowl of bread-and-milk, is coming into favor again!

It's simple to prepare — a grand team for flavor — and practically a complete food for buoyant good health. Today leading nutritionists have taken up its praise where our grandparents left off. For they've discovered that a bowl of bread-and-milk supplies nearly everything the human body needs.

Vitamin-rich

Pure milk, they explain, is a "protective" food. It's rich in vitamins and minerals that "protect" by helping you to build up resistance. Milk might be called a "beauty food," too, because its food factors are necessary for lustrous hair and a healthy complexion. Grown-ups, as well as youngsters, need the vitamins and minerals in a bowl of bread-and-milk.

Bread for Energy

The modern white bread you get from the grocer or the baker, is made with milk, too. It contains some vitamins and minerals, as well as valuable proteins for muscle and tissue repair. But bread is chiefly important as our best and cheapest energy food.

Since 85% of all the food we eat is used by the body for creating energy, it's easy to see why bread's been our "staff of life" for centuries.

Not Fattening

A supper-time bowl of bread-and-milk makes a satisfying and a nourishing meal — but it's not a "fattening" food.

One pint of pasteurized or certified milk provides 340 calories. Three slices of bread (the usual ready-sliced type) each add approximately 70 calories more. A generous bowl of bread-and-milk, therefore, supplies approximately 550 calories.

You could actually live on five such bowls of bread-and-milk a day without getting one bit fatter, for the average adult needs from 2,500 to 3,000 calories daily.

Ways to Serve Bread-and-Milk

According to Dr. James A. Tobey, prominent health authority, bread and milk combines to make an ideal "little meal" for children. So when you're in a hurry — make it bread-and-milk . . . for breakfast, lunch, a fourth meal at four, or for supper. And there are dozens of ways you can "dress it up."

Some like it hot: for a warming dish, simply heat up the milk (but don't boil it). For a cereal-dish, stir bread in hot milk till it's soft, then add salt and butter. Or parch the bread in your oven, and pour browned butter and hot milk over the crisp gold slices.

Some like it cold: try rich slices of baker's bread cut into squares and covered with ice cold milk, served in a deep dish and sprinkled with sugar.

Flavor the milk anyway you like — with sugar and vanilla, raspberry jam, nutmeg and sugar, cinnamon — and sugar, chocolate sauce, beaten raw egg and a little sugar.

Or spread the bread with molasses or corn syrup, with butter and brown sugar, with honey, jelly or jam. Let the youngsters discover new bread-and-milk treats for themselves. They'll love the fun of experimenting — and enjoy these "twin foods" for sturdy health all the more!

Dinner In A Hurry

Bacon Grill

- 1 pound sliced bacon
- 6 slices pineapple
- Asparagus bundles
- 3 large cooked potatoes
- 2 tablespoons butter
- ¼ cup grated cheese

Arrange all ingredients individually on the broiler rack. Dot asparagus and potatoes with butter and sprinkle with grated cheese. Broil at a moderate temperature until bacon is done and the fruit and vegetables heated through and browned. Turn bacon so that it will be evenly cooked. To serve, arrange fruits and vegetables in center with bacon as a border.

The broiler rack should be placed about three inches from the source of heat to give the best results. Broiled bacon should be crisp, but not brittle. Bacon slices which have been placed cold on a cool broiler rack will usually lie flat and can be attractively served.

PLYMOUTH BUILDS GREAT CARS

LOOKING FORWARD

By Franklyn Waltman
Publicity Director, Republican National Committee

Symbolic of the New Deal attitude toward industrial and business expansion and its constant itch to set itself up as a commercial dictator of the country is the current controversy ignited by the Federal Communications Commission over television broadcasting.

In this controversy is to be found proof of Republican contentions that the New Deal is hostile to free enterprise; that it seeks to engender an atmosphere of defeatism, and that it is striving by might and main to establish a governmental dictatorship over industry in this country.

Back in 1932, Franklin D. Roosevelt, speaking at the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco, asserted that "our industrial plant is built . . . Our last frontier has long since been reached . . . A mere builder of more industrial plants, a creator of more railroad systems, an organizer of more corporations is as likely to be a DANGER as a help." In other words, Mr. Roosevelt contended that the builder of more industrial plants, the organizer of more corporations and the producer of more goods should be treated as "A DANGER" — as PUBLIC ENEMY NUMBER ONE.

Well, during the least seven years, Mr. Roosevelt and his New Dealers have certainly curbed this "DANGER." They have by every means possible taken care that none would be encouraged to build new industries or form new corporations. This is the reason why the country still has an unemployed army of 10,000,000, despite the prodigious and wasteful spending of taxpayers' money.

Having prevented the country from going ahead for seven years, the New Dealers now argue that their handiwork is proof positive that America has reached the end of its economic road—that it is in what they call a "matured economy" and that further substantial progress is impossible. All of this they say to bolster their arguments for the government taking over more activities and spending more money.

During that seven years, however, certain developments have been going on in laboratory and shop. Inventors and technicians have been at work. Some of them have been trying to bring to practical perfection television broadcasting and reception. Investors in that industry have spent millions of dollars in this work and up to date they have not been able to earn a penny on their investment.

It is generally agreed that television now has progressed sufficiently for enjoyment by the general public. The Federal Communications Commission said as much on February 29th, last, when it issued an order permitting commercial television broadcasting on a limited scale, commencing September 1st.

Of course there is no point in television broadcasting if there are no reception sets to "tune in" on such broadcasting. So the Radio Corporation of America laid plans for the sale this summer of a limited number of television reception sets. But on March 22nd, less than a month after the first order, the F. C. C. issued another edict, suspending the first and ordering hearings into the sale of television reception sets at this time.

Why this reversal? The exact reason is not clear but the F. C. C. majority justified its action on the ground that "promotional activities directed to the sale of receivers not only intensifies the danger of these instruments being left on the hands of the public but may react in the crystallizing of transmission standards at present levels."

Reduced to ordinary language the F. C. C. thus argued that it was seeking to protect the public—that it did not wish purchasers of receivers now to be stuck with sets that would be obsolete in a year or two and that, if this did not happen, manufacturers would be content with the present product and would fail to improve it.

No person in this country with enough money to buy a television receiver expects that the set now purchased will be as good as those available two or three years hence. Nevertheless, many thousands of persons now would like to have a television receiver. But the F. C. C. says they cannot. As for the contention that manufacturers will stop research and freeze technical development, the lone dissenting member of the F. C. C., T. A. M. Craven, effectively made answer when he said:

"Such a contention is absurd on its face and is not justified by either facts or experience. Nothing can stop scientific research and technical progress in a free democracy if incentive is not discouraged by the Government. The Commission itself, by order of suspension, such as in the instant case, can create such confusion as to retard the development of television and discourage the incentive and initiative of private enterprise."

Mr. Craven stated the case very well. He might have pointed out that all the scientific developments of the last century have been in a state of fluidity. He might have asked if there ever would have been an automobile industry in this country if a board down in Washington told Henry Ford he could not have sold his first "flyer" because year after next he might make a better one.

Or he might have pointed out that the radio industry never would have developed if the sale of reception sets operated on batteries had been for-bidden because some day there would be receivers which could be attached to the house current. And, would we ever have any scientific textbooks if publishers were forbidden to publish them because next year—as always happens—something new would be discovered?

The action of the F. C. C. in this case illustrates the real purposes of the New Deal better than any ten thousand words. Not only does it completely reverse itself in less than a month, but it undertakes to suppress—or at least hold back—a new industry which some day will supply employment for many thousand persons. But, as Mr. Roosevelt suggested, we must be ever on guard against the "DANGER" of building more industries or producing more goods!

Seed Sowing is an Art Garden Fan Should Learn

When a gardener buys a packet of seed, usually it bears terse directions, such as "Sow in the open ground when the weather is warm," "Sow in heat," etc. They sound simple enough, but one accustomed to sowing seed would hardly agree that it is as simple as it sounds. Seed sowing is quite an art in itself, easily learned, but details must be observed for full success. Fortunately, seed is the cheapest commodity on the market, and probably more seed is wasted through poor methods or careless work in sowing than from any other reason. Knowledge of correct methods of seed sowing undoubtedly would increase the good reputation of seedsmen, who are all too often blamed for ill success.

The seed in its function as the originator of plant life is a small body, often a very tiny one, which contains a microscopic plant called the embryo with a quantity of food matter stored in the seed and often in the thickened first pair of leaves known as seedleaves or cotyledons which differ from the true leaves of the plant, which appear later. Sometimes the stored food supply is missing in seeds. The whole is surrounded by a more or less hard and thick shell or coating.

Under proper conditions the embryo escapes from this protecting cover and the mature plant results. The escape is called germination. At the start of germination, the primary parts that later become root and stem thrust through the seed covering, the root turning downward and the stem upward. Moisture and temperature are the two factors that control germination, and they are the two factors that must be considered in successful seed sowing.

In the mechanics of seed sowing, the first point to observe is never to bury the seed too deeply in the soil. If planted too deeply it may be smothered before it can find strength to thrust through the soil, exhausting all the stored food supply of the seed in the effort. Deep sowing is a most frequent mistake and the commonest cause of poor success with seeds. Cover a seed with its own depth of soil. This is the best rule of thumb. Tiny seeds merely lie on the surface.

HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS WIN AT BUCKINGHAM BY SIX-RUN RALLY

Stage Rally in Fifth Inning and Chalk Up Second Straight Victory

FINAL SCORE IS 12 TO 11

Doegirls Spurt in Final Three Frames and Score Nine Runs

BUCKINGHAM, May 9—A big six-run rally in the fifth featured by Escher Tomlinson's double with the bags full to score three runs, enabled Bristol High's softball club to chalk up their second straight league victory as they nosed out the Buckingham Doe-girls here yesterday afternoon, 12-11.

The Doe-girls, trailing as much as 10-2 as late as the last of the fifth, spurted in the final three frames to score nine of their 11 runs to throw a scare into the visitors. But the Cardinals' "squashed" the uprising just in time to avert defeat and save the day for Bernadette Coyle who scored her second successive triumph through the victory.

LANDRETH NINE TO TRY AGAIN TO OPEN THEIR HOME SEASON

Weather Last Saturday Prevented Farmers From Playing First Game Here

IRISH STARS SCHEDULED

American Legion Cadets Will Parade To Grounds And Give Drill

Landreth's Seeds will inaugurate the opening of their baseball season Saturday afternoon at Landreth Ball Park at three o'clock.

Their opponents will be the Philadelphia Irish Stars, who were to have played here last Saturday, but the game was called off on account of cool and threatening weather. The Irish Stars are great favorites with the fans of Bristol, for on their several appearances here last year, they put up snappy games. Kohler, who will be on the mound for the visitors, beat Landreth's Seeds last summer in a fine game, 2 to 1, and Manager Klein of the Stars says that Kohler is in wonderful shape and expects to set the Farmers down again, Saturday. The Stars have not been beaten this year. Their last victory was Sunday, when they defeated Spring City, 2 to 1, with Kohler on the mound.

Al Carey will probably toss them up for the Bristol boys, with Howard Black in reserve. Nearly all the old favorites from last year's Landreth Club will be on hand, Saturday, and with such an attraction as the Philadelphia Irish Stars a good game is in prospect.

The American Legion Cadet Corps will parade from the Legion Home-down Radcliffe street, over Market street, and down Outer street to the ball park, and at 2:15 p. m. will put on their celebrated drill. These girls and boys always make a wonderful showing wherever they go, and a good crowd is anticipated to be on hand to

FALLSINGTON WALLOPS YARDLEY HIGH GIRLS

YARDLEY, May 9—Fallsington High set a new season's record here yesterday afternoon as they soundly trounced Yardley High by the mere score of 24-0 in an upper division game of the Lower Bucks County League. The victory marked the sixth in a row for the Falcons who are still undefeated and marching contentedly along toward their first divisional championship with a two and a half game lead.

SPARTANS FAIL TO APPEAR

The Burlington Spartans, scheduled to play Bristol A. A. last night on Leedom's field, failed to put in an appearance, causing much disappointment to the followers of the local team. Sunday afternoon, the A. A. will play the Northeast Italians away and then play the same team next Wednesday night on Leedom's field.

BENSALEM GIRLS WIN ALTHOUGH OUT-HIT

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, May 9—Although out-hit, 10-7, the Bensalem Owl girls had two big innings in which they scored a quartet of runs in each to provide themselves with more than enough tallies to whip New Hope High here yesterday afternoon, 10-5. By winning the Owlets retained their hold on first place as they chalked up their fourth victory in a row without a setback.

Burlington Defeats Bristol and Morrisville

MORRISVILLE, May 9—A crack track team came out of Burlington to whip both Bristol and Morrisville easily in a triangular meet held on the new Robert Morris athletic field here yesterday afternoon. The Burs rolled up 64 points to rout the Cards and Bulldogs who finished second and third with 25 and 19 points respectively.

In winning, the Jerseys took six first places and tied with Bristol for another while the Bulldogs copped three top spots and Bristol grabbed off the other pair beside their tie. Only in the 440 dash did the ultimate winners fail to score a single point. However, they made up for that by sweeping the pole vault event and scoring 8 of 9 points in both the 100 yard dash and half mile run.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Herman, Sr. and Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Jackson, Wood street, enjoyed a trip Sunday to Beach Haven, and other shore points in that vicinity.

SPRING EVENT
The forty-eighth annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Tuberculosis Society is scheduled for Williamsport, May 9-10, with prominent speakers, including representatives of industry, State Health and Educational Departments, State Medical Society, nursing organizations, sanatoria, clinicians and leaders in research.
"Conquering Tuberculosis a Task Requiring Teamwork" is the subject for a symposium to be participated in by representatives of five groups especially concerned with the task of overcoming tuberculosis.
The Pennsylvania Tuberculosis Society is the oldest organization of its kind and plans a notable fiftieth anniversary meeting in 1942.

STOP THIEF!
Tuberculosis may steal a few months' pay. It may take years of health. It even takes life.
If discovered EARLY tuberculosis usually can be cured. When treatment is started LATE it may take years to overcome.
The advice of medical men is: Don't wait until you feel tired all the time, until you have lost weight, until you have a cough that hangs on and on, or until indigestion bothers you. When you start ailing, tuberculosis may be advancing. You should find out before you get into trouble.
Go to a good doctor while you feel in good health. Get an X-ray of your chest to find out if you have tuberculosis. The X-ray will show it before YOU know it.
